

RADIOFREQUENCY

Skin rejuvenation through thermal lift!

What is Radiofrequency?

Radiofrequency (RF) is a proven, non-invasive technology to combat signs of ageing on the face, neck and décolleté.

The tissue is tightened, lines and wrinkles are reduced and contours are redefined.

How does Radiofrequency?

Collagen - newly formed!

Treatment with radiofrequency waves, also known as thermal shift, uses electromagnetic oscillations of the radio waves to heat the skin.

As a reaction to this rapid heating, the collagen fibres contract. This shortens the distance between the dermis and the muscles. This process is called „shrinking“ and results in an immediate tightening effect. At the same time, heat proteins are released that stimulate the formation of new collagen. This collagen is largely responsible for the skin's resilience and elasticity, as it stores water and thus keeps the skin firm.

Due to the heat development, the skin's ability to absorb active ingredients is also improved.

What are the advantages of Radiofrequency?

Effect of the radiofrequency treatment:

- Activates the regeneration and new formation of collagen fibres
- Promotes microcirculation
- Stimulates the metabolic processes

Quick visible and noticeable immediate results:

- Lifting the cheek area
- Reduction of the pores
- Strengthening the contours
- Definition of the jaw line
- Reduction of wrinkles

How can I continue the treatment

Radiofrequency is a highly effective dermatological treatment method.

Active ingredient-rich home care products and the daily care routine ensure lasting results and support the skin in its regeneration.

How many treatments are necessary?

Visible results are already achieved after the first treatment. In order to attain a lasting skin improvement, a minimum of 6 treatments in a treatment rhythm of between one and 4 weeks is recommended.

Depending on the skin condition, other apparatus applications can also be successfully combined.
